GWADAR

Located in the Southwestern part of Balochistan Province, Gwadar is the world's deepest sea port. The area shows inhabitation as early as the bronze age with settlements around some of the area's oases and has a very rich history where the ruling authority was transferred from one nation to the other. For a period, it was a region of the Achaemenid Persian Empire. The region remained on the sidelines of history for a millennium until the Arab-Muslim army of Umar captured Makran in AD 643 and over the intervening (and nearly equivalent) amount of time the area was contested by various powers. This was then followed by almost two centuries of local rule by the various Baloch tribes.

During the 15th Century Portuguese attacked and tried capturing this area but failed. Later Gwadar came under Omani rulers. Until in 1948, Makran acceded to Pakistan and was made a district – Gwadar then, was not included in Makran. In 1958, Gwadar and its surrounding areas were reverted by Muscat to Pakistan as Pakistan purchased the Gwadar enclave from Oman for 5.5 billion Rupee.

The Pakistani government integrated Gwadar into Balochistan province on 1 July 1977 as the district headquarters of the newly formed Gwadar District. In 1993, the Government of Pakistan formally conceived the plan to develop Gwadar into a major port city with a deep-sea port and to connect it with Pakistan's highway and rail networks. On 22 March 2002, the Government of Pakistan began construction of Gwadar Port, a modern deep-sea port, Phase I of which was completed in March 2007. Gwadar Port was inaugurated on 20 March 2007.

Tourism in Gwadar is becoming a trend because of beautiful beaches, sunset points, Islands, golden deserts. Gwadar is famous for three things: its fishing village, 5-star hotel on the hammerhead and the famous Gwadar port. Gwadar city also has several mud volcanoes which are a sight to witness.
